COROTOMAN
Lancaster County, Virginia

"The first of the Carter buildings was undoubtedly Corotoman, which, judging from King Carter's great wealth and the extant remains, was a major architectural work. Fine as it was, the mansion was destined for a short life. Built in the first quarter of the eighteenth century, it was burned in 1729 and never rebuilt. ... The inventory of 1732 lists only the items in a small dwelling. This may have been John Carter's house, built after the purchase of the land about 1659, or a dependency of the new mansion. It was probably the old gabled house, standing in ruins, which finally disappeared about 1930. Sometimes called the Spinsters' House, it was of frame, a story and a half high, with large end chimneys. It had a curiously complex plan, complete records of which no longer remain. The site of the great house, on a broad headland looking down toward Chesapeake Bay, is strewn with pieces of cut stone and marble. Scub undergrowth prevents a close examination of the area, but stone revetments in the river are said to bound the old formal shore line which, in turn, bounded the forecourt. In the yard of a small house nearby is the great well, superbly built of wedge-shaped, cut-stone blocks."
